

CLIENT-CENTERED THERAPY

The central idea of this approach is that the potential growth of any client will tend to be released in a relationship in which the therapist communicates realness, caring and a deeply sensitive and non-judgmental understanding. The therapist practices empathic listening while allowing the client to freely voice his or her feelings.